Dear Mr McElligott:

The long lost jackets were delivered to me about five minuets ago. I am sure you will be as glad to receive the news as I was to get them.

Of course there would have to be something wrong. One of the boxes had been opened, and a jacket was missing. It was a size 44, and the number in it must have been 6. It was easy to see the box had been opened. I will keep it until I hear from you in case the express company is responsible. Please let me know about the responsibility for the jacket.

You have been held up so long now I want to pay you for the merchandise. Therefore I will appreciate hearing from you right away.

I am sorry this order was such a nusiance, but it is due to the overcrowded railroad conditions I am sure, and could not be helped.

I will be looking for a reply as soon as possible.

Very Truly Yours
